

STATEMENT:

We are trying to tell the personal stories of activists in Ferguson to reshape the narrative and tell a nationally-recognized story through a local lense.

This story is about 2014 protests in Ferguson over the death of Mike Brown and Dr. Mislan's following research papers regarding activists' perspectives who were at the center of the movement. The angle of this story is focusing on specific activists' voices and giving them space to tell their story. The focus will reframe and reinterpret their story from how activists were portrayed in national media.

Our design elements are:

- Research team and introduction of the study
- Arguments from the interviews with activists
 - Demographics
- MAPS, location of demonstrations, as interactive as possible (e.g. click on some buttons and show some relative documents, photos)
- Other data: social media, especially Twitter; photos; archives, such as documents from Department of Justice in Saint Louis

Additionally, the site will not paint social justice issues with a biased brush; rather, the focus will be on individual activists and their personal experiences.

The audience of our website will include young people younger than 25, news organizations, government officials and other people who are interested in social justice issues.

Highlights of the website include presenting the outcomes of the research, focusing on the activists' voices, reframing and reinterpreting the story shown across national media, and sharing with a bigger audience across the country. Stories all over the national media were told out of context, with little knowledge or information on the actual events that had occurred in Ferguson. We want to highlight the activists' voices to get the stories from their personal experiences of the events in Ferguson out onto national media platforms.

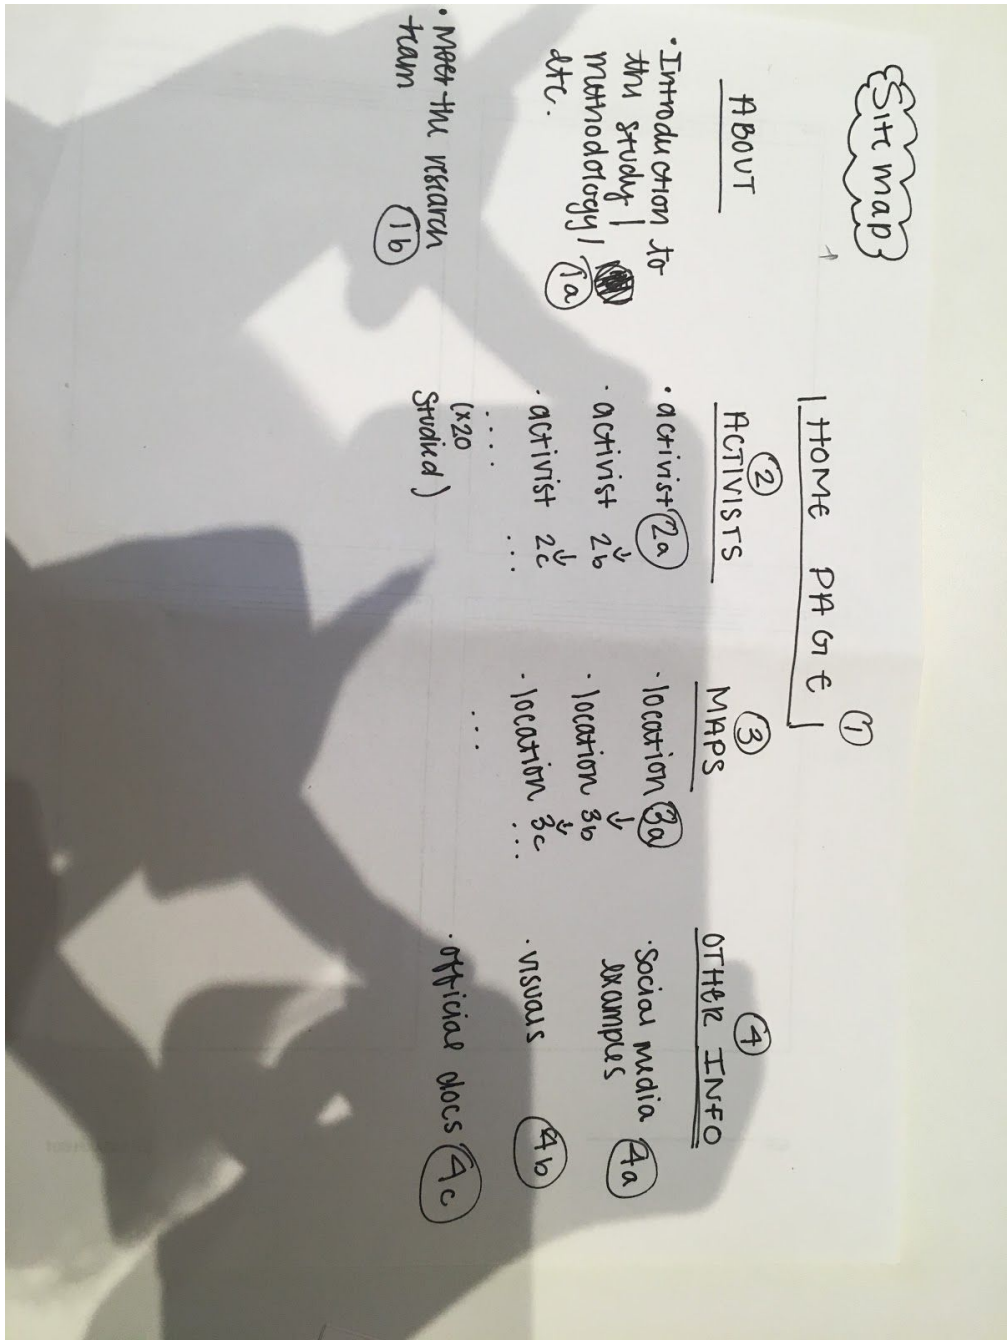

Our design decisions are focused on being simple and informative to show the perspectives of the activists involved in the Ferguson demonstrations. The color scheme will include white and dark grey, possibly with a splash of yellow because we want to keep the sight mainly directed toward providing the information from the research conducted by Dr. Mislan. We decided to keep the colors neutral to not draw attention away from the main point of the website. Bright colors (except for highlights in yellow, which are mainly used for the navigation bar and the site title) will be excluded because they are not appropriate for the site's true meaning: highlighting activists' experiences speaking out about police brutality.

We might include the professional social media pages of the activists to show what they stand for/the core values of their activism, as well as background information on the events leading up to and that occurred in Ferguson, Missouri. We will mainly be using the research provided by Dr. Mislan.

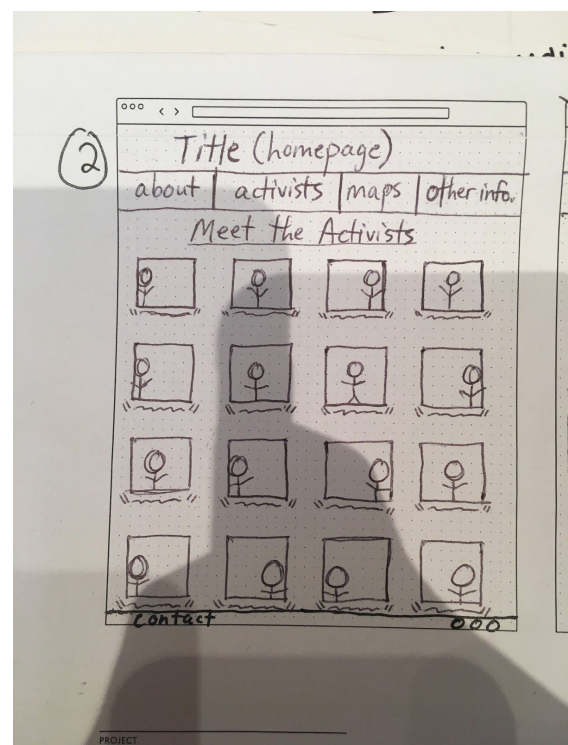

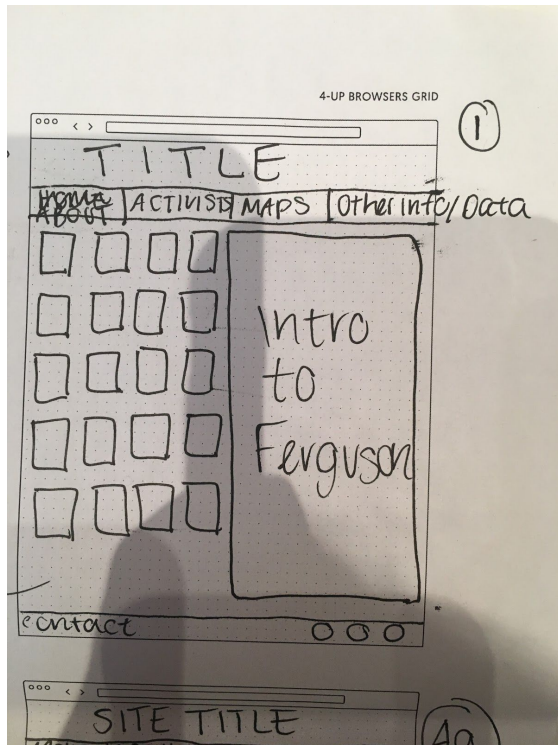

Headline and intro

- Headline: “Activists in Ferguson”
- Intro: After the shooting of high school graduate Michael Brown, thousands of activists gathered in the streets of Ferguson, Missouri to protest police brutality. As demonstrations increased and tensions escalated, different stories spread quickly throughout the nation about the events that occurred in Ferguson. The activists involved have their own personal experiences of Ferguson. Meet the activists, hear their stories.

Note:

Fonts for the website should be Merriweather (Bold) for headline and Open Sans (Regular) for body text, after we got the feedback from Rob that our previous headline font was fat and distracting and changed it to Merriweather.

Fonts for the mock-ups here are Times (Bold) for headline and Calibri (Regular) for body text. The reason we did this is because our illustrator hasn't embedded these fonts. So we choose the fonts as similar as possible for mock-up.
